

Three years
and 21 days
in the life of the Harvard Living Wage Campaign.

“The inspiring
story of the living wage campaign at Harvard should be told to the whole country, so it is a wonderful gift to have it on film, in a way that brings alive the remarkable solidarity of students, workers, and the community.”

—Howard Zinn

A powerful story of how students and immigrant janitors took on—and defeated—one of the most powerful corporations in the world. Occupation documents the historic three-week sit-in by the Harvard Living Wage Campaign. The campaign demonstrates one local response to corporate power in an age of globalization, and catapulted the living wage movement to the center of public discussion. It is directed by Maple Razsa and Pacho Velez, and narrated by Ben Affleck.
