
We hope that Occupation emboldens people to change the landscape of power in their own community. The film powerfully depicts how movements are built—how people from dramatically different backgrounds joined forces for a common belief in justice and were able to raise their hands together in victory. While this film deals specifically with the issue of a living wage, the ideas of grassroots organizing and the inspiration generated by the Harvard Living Wage Campaign are applicable to a great range of issues that affect all of our communities. In an era of corporate globalization, the living wage campaign is one local response to the prevailing structures of power. This film is one tool to start organizing, educating and inspiring living wage campaigns.
